

The Spring 2013
Teaching and Learning Series
Knowing Our Students: Empowering Success

Enhancing Program Assessment and Quality Through Direct Measures of Student Performance

February 22 • DUC - Room 374 • 1:00 – 2:30 pm

Presented by the School of Education Assessment Committee:

Li Bardon, Paula DeHart, Maysee Herr, and Pat Marinac

The departmental assessment process provides an invaluable opportunity to determine the degree to which students are achieving critical program learning outcomes. But, navigating through the assessment process and making the most of indirect and direct measures of student learning can be challenging. In this session, the School of Education Assessment Committee will share how they are using program learning outcomes and indirect and direct assessment measures to determine the degree to which students are achieving critical learning outcomes and to identify program strengths and weaknesses. Participants who attend this presentation will learn:

- How program learning outcomes can guide the selection of direct and indirect assessment measures
- How an assessment rubric/matrix can be used to determine how well students are achieving learning outcomes
- How the results of direct and indirect assessment measures can be analyzed, summarized, and used to determine program strengths and weaknesses
- How program assessment can be used to study and highlight inclusive excellence
- How assessment results can be used to revise courses and programs (Departmental or GEP)
- How all of the above can be incorporated into a program assessment report
